1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image processing apparatus and method, which control image output, and a storage medium.

2. Description of the Related Art In recent years, inkjet printers have gained the status of inexpensive color printers. Also, color copying machines, which are built in each home and used by each family member, are spreading. An inkjet printer performs operations such as print data provision, color conversion, and color adjustment. For color conversion, a color conversion table is prepared for each ink, and, for each ink, color conversion is performed on a per-color basis. Color conversion is also performed according to output devices and their characteristics. Also, color space conversion using a table is employed. Color conversion and color space conversion are performed in accordance with an instruction from a user. For example, for a color copying machine, a color conversion table and a color space conversion table are prepared, and they are selected and used depending on the content of an input job. Also, before a printing operation, a character pattern, or an index image may be prepared, so that appropriate color space conversion processing is performed at an appropriate timing, as needed. In this case, when a color copying machine outputs an output image, calibration processing is performed to set output characteristics. Thereafter, image data is output. In a case where the output device is an inkjet printer, color conversion processing is performed on a color-by-color basis so that the output image has a desired color. At this time, when a color copying machine performs color conversion of an output image at a certain color, the amount of color conversion becomes large. For this reason, when performing color conversion for the same color range and the same resolution of output images, the color data amount for each output image increases, and processing time taken for color conversion processing becomes long. Also, printing cannot be performed at a high speed, and a long period of time is required for printing. In this case, as proposed in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 2002-222407, data of one color space is converted into another color space by a color conversion table. Then, based on the color conversion table, color conversion of the entire image is
