A shrine in Sakurai's hometown of Kazan says the life of the post-World War II-era trade minister was filled with "dignity, courage and contributions." The shrine's altar is filled with artifacts related to the trade minister's life, including a picture of a bronze statue of Sakurai that's being held in front of the altar as his shrine prepares to announce Sakurai's birth. The ceremony is similar to one held at another shrine to mark the first anniversary of Sakurai's death on Dec. 22, 1999. Sakurai, 59, was chosen as Japan's first post-World War II trade minister in 1959, when he was just 25. His life was cut short when he fell off a balcony after making a speech to about 1,000 people in a hotel in western Japan. The ceremony on June 3 for the 11th and final chief of the Japanese economic reconstruction committee will be held in the same city as the first ceremony a year ago, to mark the first anniversary of Sakurai's death. Sakurai and Maeda were also born on the same day, June 3. Sakurai was inducted into the World War II History Hall of Fame in August 2001. He died after slipping on a wet floor while giving a speech at a hotel in Kachan, Okayama, in western Japan. Maeda, 69, who died in 2003, was for decades one of Japan's central bankers and was also the first foreign-educated chief of the Japanese Finance Ministry. For the 10th and 11th chiefs of the Japanese economic reconstruction committee, their tributes were delivered by the presidents of National and Bank of Japan, the central banks of Japan. Prime Minister Shinzo Abe told Maeda, the prime minister and central bank chief at the time of his
